INTERVIEW

CEO/LONGINES

TRANSLATING LEGACY TO A MODERN CONTEXT

In the wings of the recently concluded Commonwealth Games Glasgow 2026, India Today Spice sat down for a candid chat with Patrick Aoun, CEO, Longines

Riaan Jacob George

Q: From one of the world's most recognised legacy brands, Longines has successfully evolved into a digital-forward brand, much ahead of a lot of its competitors. How do you blend legacy and modern digital marketing?

The two worlds complement each other; they do not collide, in my opinion. The key to success and longevity is to adapt. And to be a pioneer, like Longines has been for decades, whether in timing equipment, timepieces, or movements done for the first time. Being a pioneer, by definition, is to do something that others haven't done before. And this does not contradict the fact that we are a traditional brand nonetheless. So we could still be traditional at our core, without changing our identity, but adopting modern communication channels, where we can reach an audience that is different today. It is a requirement of the market that has evolved; we accept that, we have the flexibility to understand that the