

KLE

Zizi Hattab knows this better than most. Born to Moroccan parents, raised in Spain, and trained under Swiss culinary legend Andreas Caminada, she turned plant based cooking into a Michelin awarded restaurant (opened in 2020). Tucked into District 3, KLE has the intimacy of a neighbourhood restaurant, but the precision of fine dining. Zizi Hattab's four to six course surprise menu celebrates seasonality; an homage to why produce is produced when it is produced. A black pearl mushroom comes with a sauce concocted from 25 local ingredients, including the Weggis lemongrass to provide that perfect tang. There is house bread, but not without aquafaba aioli and Moroccan hummus to generate some excitement; and pickles of radish, cauliflower, beetroot and mushroom make sure to punctuate the meal with acidity. Hattab's Spanish Moroccan background surfaces without overpowering the produce. KLE's achievement is making vegetables feel neither imitative nor intimidating. They simply light up a plate, while the room and terrace keep the sophistication easy.

Where Zweierstrasse 114, 8003 Zurich, Switzerland

USP Local produce, global references, and fine dining, not fuss dining.

Meal for Two ₹64,000 approx. with wine pairing for a 7 Course menu.

Contact https://www.restaurantkle.com/

DAR

DAR moves slowly, softly, quietly, into a less formal setting, one that earned the Michelin distinction 'Bib Gourmand' on its own. Spanish and Moroccan influences shape the menu here too, but this time, the food is made for sharing. Seasonal vegetables become unassuming but equally riveting dishes, from salted-lemon-mustard steamed buns to roasted beetroot with turmeric foam, among other shared plates. Homemade breads and desserts keep it indulgent. Brunch offers honeycomb-shaped pancakes with house-made Nutella and orange syrup. Its name says much: "dar" means "to give" in Spanish and "house" in Moroccan. That is why DAR feels less formal, more like somewhere to settle in, break bread, and refuse to leave.

Where Weststrasse 20, 8003 Zurich

USP Moroccan-Spanish sharing plates, vegan cocktails, and a reason to linger.

Meal for Two approx. ₹25,000

Contact https://www.restaurantdar.com/

