A CITY FINDS ITS CANVAS

The upcoming Hyderabad Art Week will feature a slew of exhibitions, workshops and city-wide collaborations celebrating contemporary art

The inaugural edition of Hyderabad Art Week (HAW) is bringing together four galleries, artists, collectors, students and cultural institutions for a city-wide programme celebrating contemporary art. Founded by Bhargavi Gundala of Dhi Contemporary, Lakshmi Nambiar of Srishti Art, Rekha Lahoti of Kalakriti Art Gallery and Supraja Rao of Kadari Art Gallery, HAW aims to connect Hyderabad's creative communities.

"Hyderabad's art scene deserves a bigger place in the city's life. We have strong artists, galleries and institutions, but no shared platform to bring them together...I felt there was a need for greater connection between them," says Nambiar. This, she hopes, will help establish Hyderabad as a destination for contemporary art alongside its cultural heritage. Nambiar says that HAW will encourage people to engage with art beyond individual gallery spaces.

The inaugural edition features four exhibitions. Dhi Contemporary presents

IN HER NATIVE TONGUE

Palette Art Gallery brings together six indigenous women artists—Rita Shyam, Jyoti Uikey, Roshini Shyam, Anita Shyam, Japani Shyam and Santoshi Shyam—in an exhibition exploring the evolving languages of contemporary Indigenous art. Rooted in Gond traditions, their works draw on mythology, nature and everyday life. The exhibition demonstrates how inherited practices continue to develop through contemporary expression.

Marking Time

Scholar, editor and ceramist Rahul Kumar presents more than 70 recent ceramic works in his third solo exhibition at Exhibit 320. Divided into two movements, Atman and Brahman, the exhibition explores memory, mortality and the cycle of decay and renewal. Through clay, Kumar reflects on the impermanence of the body, objects and experience, asking what remains of a life and how creative acts become attempts to preserve what time inevitably changes.
