

a solo exhibition by Gayatri Danthuri, while Kadari Art Gallery showcases young and emerging artists exploring ecology and sustainability. At Kalakriti Art Gallery, I Know What I Am Doing, curated by P.S. Jalaja, accompanies an engagement with the gallery's archives. Srishti Art presents The Weight of Small Things, a solo exhibition by Alpana Vij featuring found twigs.

For students, the programme has Beyond the Classroom, featuring conversations with practitioners Lina Vincent, Kirtana Thangavelu, B.V. Suresh and Suresh Jeyaram, alongside workshops exploring collage, salt crystallisation and natural dyes. Gallery circuits, open studios and collaborations with the Salar Jung Museum and the RMZ Foundation's Sculpture Park further connect art with the city.

HAW'S GOAL IS TO MAKE CULTURAL SPACES MORE WELCOMING AND MAKE ART A PART OF DAILY LIFE

For Lahoti, the priority is accessibility. "Through HAW, we hope to bridge the gap between art and its audiences," she says, making cultural spaces more welcoming and art a greater part of everyday life.

Rao hopes to encourage a more curious and inclusive engagement with art, particularly among younger audiences. Her aspiration, she says, is "to communicate with the city that, regardless of professional, cultural and economic backgrounds, art rejects no one". ■
