integrity of Delcourt's design language. "There is a truth and an honesty that lend each of Christophe's designs a sense of natural clarity," shares Aumont. This honesty dictates how raw material enters the fold—only making the cut if they can completely re-imagine it. Case in point, their signature gouged wood, where they took a texture traditionally reserved strictly for oak and defiantly experimented on cedar, walnut and cast bronze.

Writing New Stories

While French minimalism might initially seem at odds with the richly layered vocabulary of contemporary Indian homes, Aumont notes an instinctual symmetry. "We love telling stories. Each piece of furniture we create is like the beginning of a new story, the rest of which is yet to be written," he shares. Operating
