

Marvel of Mud

The home rejects clinical, high-gloss minimalism for a deeply tactile presence. The exterior facade is coated in surkhi, a traditional Indian plaster made from crushed brick powder, lime and water. We have carefully tweaked its tone to achieve an organic, mud-like finish that mirrors the sun-baked settlements of Mexico and Spain. Deep-set windows, punctured railings and a terracotta-tiled roof establish a strong Mediterranean profile, softened by the inclusion of rustic wooden beams. Arrival here is intentionally poetic. Guests bypass any grand, imposing gates, entering instead through a modest wooden side door that leads straight into the garden, mimicking a quiet threshold in the Spanish countryside.
